BioStat International, Inc. Celebrates 17th Anniversary
Announces Creation of Proprietary Software for Clinical Trials

Tampa, FL, June 27, 2011 – This month Tampa-based contract research organization, BioStat International, Inc. (BSI), celebrates 17 years of business with creation of proprietary software for clinical trials. The software will enhance BSI's service and improve cost-effectiveness for its core client base of small-sized manufacturers of pharmaceuticals and medical devices.

BSI was founded on June 16, 1994 by Maureen Lyden in her Tampa home office, providing biostatistical and data management services. Lyden envisioned a company that not only would provide expected quality service, but one that would exceed expectations and incite the clients to continue to trust their projects to BSI.

BSI has since grown in staff and, internationally, has served more than 50 clients. The company has provided data management and biostatistical support for many clinical trials over the years, and is currently providing analysis for numerous breast cancer and diabetes research projects.

“The expertise and dedication of our employees through the years has truly made BSI what it is today.” said Maureen Lyden, M.S., President of BioStat International. “We look forward to continuing to serve the research community and the healthcare industry as they strive to bring innovative products to market.”

Lyden foresees 2011 to be a benchmark year with the launch of a web-based electronic data capture (EDC) software system for clinical trials and other research projects. The software will provide an adaptable, flexible and customizable platform for data entry, quality control and reporting of research data. The experienced BSI analytical teams that will design forms and manage data within the software will provide the assurance of a quality database for timely and accurate analyses.
